Profile: Jessica Morthorpe

Jess is an innovator who loves to work with people. They are passionate about social justice, creating community change and community organisation. Jess is associated with the organisation "Psychology for a Safe Climate" (PSC), a not-for-profit organisation founded in 2010 in Melbourne, to foster emotional engagement with climate change. PSC was founded in response to the lack of individual and community commitment to address the climate emergency. PSC aims to use their professional knowledge and skills to increase understanding and engagement with the psychological impact of climate change.

Their purpose is to support people in facing the reality of the climate emergency. They aim to build people's capacity to respond constructively to climate change by promoting and strengthening mental health and wellbeing.

We engage with those working on climate change, the caring professions, and the broader community.
